CHANGES IN INSTITUTIONS

Many local factors, in addition to war interests, enter into the question of the survival of an institution. At least four institutions have closed their doors since the war began. This group includes the Oklahoma State School of Mines, South Carolina College, College of Montana and Lyon College, Mississippi. A movement which considerably preceded the war, but has undoubtedly received impetus this year, has been in the direction of the combination of colleges in the same field. In two cases this has characterized colleges for women—Elizabeth College merged with Roanoke's Women's College, at Salem, Va., and
